Date: September 25, 2022; Time: 3.00 PM to 5 PM

No. of students Participated: 85

Objective of the event:

To sensitise the students about the biodiversity and ecosystem

Description of event

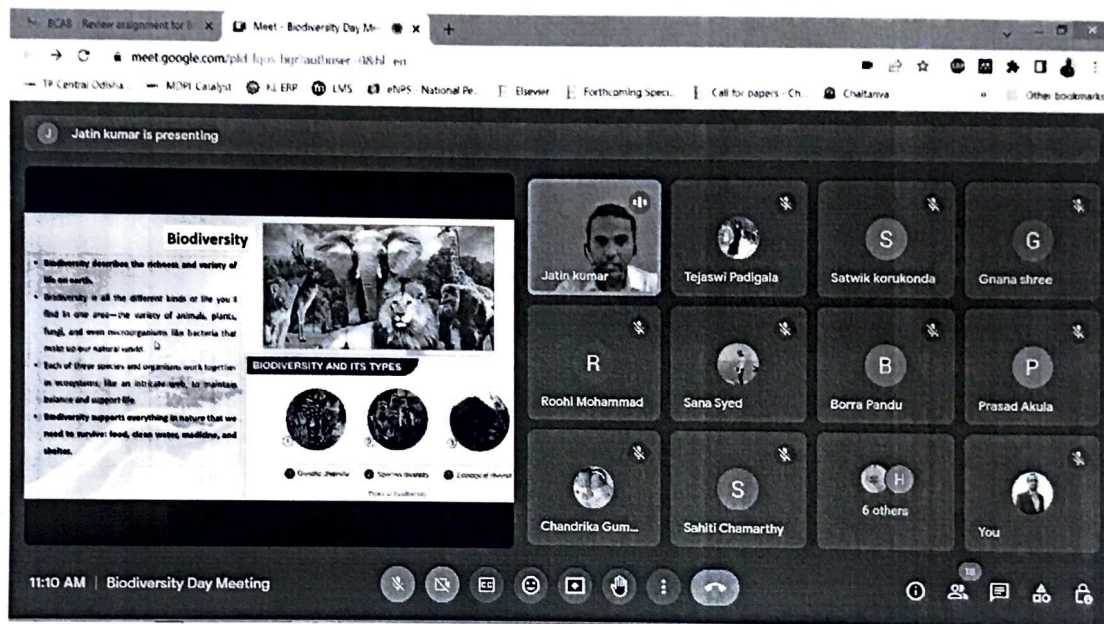

The webinar, "Exploring Ecosystem Resilience: Adapting to Biodiversity Loss," delved into the critical issue of biodiversity loss and its implications for ecosystem resilience. It provided an overview of the current state of biodiversity loss, emphasizing its causes and the resulting impacts on ecosystems and human well-being. Throughout the session, various adaptation strategies were explored, including habitat restoration, protected area management, and sustainable land use practices. Case studies from different regions showcased both the challenges posed by biodiversity loss and successful approaches for enhancing ecosystem resilience. Discussions also touched upon the importance of community engagement, partnerships, and policy interventions in promoting biodiversity conservation. Additionally, technological innovations such as remote sensing and data analytics were highlighted for their role in supporting biodiversity monitoring and management efforts. The webinar concluded with reflections on future challenges and opportunities for advancing ecosystem resilience in the face of ongoing biodiversity loss and global environmental change.

Outcome of the event

The students can use this knowledge for their experiments and project works.
