About the Conference

Women are regarded as the society's essential unit. She creates a family, which creates a society, and society, in turn, creates a country. Women must take the lead in development if society is to flourish. Women have a range of essential tasks to play in society. The social, cultural, economic, political, and religious aspects of a woman's role are primarily recognised. Furthermore, women have held effective skills and capacities to make significant contributions to society. In certain circumstances, women's contributions to society's well-being are made through their participation in the workforce, education, and other means. Women are challenging the world today by immersing themselves in new fields and conducting experiments. While a wide spectrum of gender inequities persists, and some of them look immune to change, they do so in the context of a completely different set of societal standards, political and social rights, and systematised laws. The goal of this conference is to examine how modern society treats women and how women survive in modern society.
