In most companies, identifies technical profile those with some technical expertise. Meanwhile, the non-technical profile is most likely someone who has a business background, probably specializing in an area like finance, marketing or HR recruiting. He advised how may have previously worked in a similar company, or this may well be their first job in the industry. Moving cross-industry isn't as big a deal for these folks as their technical co-workers. Finally Queries by the students are clarified.
