KLCP- Guest lecture Pharm D- Antimicrobial Resistance present and future

Agenda:

The lecture was structured to cover various aspects of antimicrobial resistance, including its definition, causes, status, and potential future scenarios. The agenda included the following key points:

Introduction to Antimicrobial Resistance:

- Definition and explanation of antimicrobial resistance.
- The difference between antimicrobial resistance and antibiotic resistance.

Causes and Factors Contributing to Antimicrobial Resistance:

- Overuse and misuse of antibiotics.
- Agricultural practices and the use of antibiotics in food production.
- Lack of new antibiotics development.

Current Status of Antimicrobial Resistance:

- Global trends and statistics.
- Impact on public health.
- Case studies highlighting the severity of the issue.

Challenges in Addressing Antimicrobial Resistance:

- Regulatory challenges.
- Lack of awareness among healthcare professionals and the general public.
- Economic factors influencing antibiotic use.

Future Implications and Strategies:

- Potential consequences if antimicrobial resistance is not addressed.
- Innovations in antibiotic development.
- Importance of a One Health approach.

Audience Response:

The lecture was well-received by the audience, comprising students, and faculty members. The interactive session that followed the presentation allowed for engaging discussions and the clarification of queries raised by the attendees.

Conclusion:

The guest lecture on "Antimicrobial Resistance: Present and Future" provided valuable insights into the pressing issue of antimicrobial resistance. The information shared by Mrs. Ramana Kumari was both informative and thought-provoking, prompting attendees to consider the importance of responsible antibiotic use and the need for collective efforts to address this global challenge.

We express our gratitude to Mrs. Ramana Kumari for sharing their expertise, and we hope that the knowledge gained from this lecture will contribute to raising awareness and fostering a sense of responsibility among the academic and healthcare community at K L College of Pharmacy.
