Faculty Development program on “Energy Conservation and Management in Industry and Commercial Buildings” by Dr. K. V. Narasimha Rao, Professor, ME, on 21-01-17 in M-114, is organised by Academic Staff College and the Dept.ME.

The resource person highlighted the need for the energy conservation and management in industry because there gap between growing demand for electrical energy and its availability is ever increasing in developing countries. In the context of increasing shortage on one hand and scarcity of resources on the other hand, the most cost-effective option available to any country to bridge the gap between demand and supply of electrical energy is energy conservation and management. World-renowned energy economists have acknowledged that good energy conservation and management practices can achieve up to 25% in energy cost reductions. This article presents some electrical energy conservation strategies and energy management practices and policies, which will enhance the conservation of electrical energy in industries. A three-pronged approach to energy conservation is presented: capacity utilization, fine-tuning and technology up gradation.

The outcomes of the seminar

- The participants understood the value of energy conservation
- The participants comprehended the ways of conserving the energy
- The participants were made aware of the futuristic energy resources
