3. Target Audience

Faculty members from all the Engineering departments of KL University.

4. Brief Report of the Programme

The Academic Staff College, in collaboration with the Office of the Dean Academics at Koneru Lakshmaiah Education Foundation, organized a Faculty Development Programme on "Project-Based Learning (PBL)" from 10.03.2026 to 14.03.2026 at Peacock Hall. The programme was conducted for faculty members of Engineering Departments with the objective of strengthening student-centered, outcome-based, and experiential learning practices.

Although the programme was scheduled over five days, the FDP followed a structured one-day module that was delivered repeatedly across all five days to accommodate different groups of faculty members. Each day witnessed the participation of a separate group of faculty participants from various departments. This format enabled wider participation and ensured that faculty members could attend the programme without affecting their academic responsibilities.

The FDP focused on equipping faculty with a comprehensive understanding of Project-Based Learning, its significance in modern education, and practical strategies for effective implementation. Various sessions were delivered by distinguished resource persons, Prof. Hari Kiran Vege, Dr. V.S. Aswin Kumer, Dr. Aravindhan Alagarsamy and Dr. M. Kavitha, each addressing different dimensions of PBL.

Brief on Session Delivered by Prof. Hari Kiran Vege

Prof. Hari Kiran Vege addressed the faculty on the initiatives being taken by Koneru Lakshmaiah Education Foundation to strengthen Project-Based Learning across the curriculum. During his address, he emphasized the university's commitment to transforming the teaching–learning process by integrating Project-Based Learning into a majority of courses, enabling students to develop critical thinking, creativity, and real-world problem-solving skills.

He elaborated on the implementation of the trimester system for the 2025 batch, which is designed to reduce academic load per term and allow students to focus more effectively on a limited number of courses. This approach supports deeper learning by providing adequate time for projects, hands-on activities, and continuous assessment aligned with PBL practices.

Prof. Hari Kiran Vege highlighted that courses under the trimester system will be structured with clearly defined project components, milestones, and outcome-based assessments, ensuring systematic implementation of PBL. Faculty members will act as mentors and facilitators, guiding students through the learning and project development process.

He also encouraged faculty members to actively contribute to course design, stating that those with expertise in specific domains may approach the Dean Academics Office to provide inputs in designing courses using the PBL framework. This collaborative approach aims to enhance the quality and relevance of course content.

Overall, the address provided clear direction on the institutional initiatives, trimester implementation strategy, and the active role of faculty in strengthening Project-Based Learning.

Report on Session Delivered by Dr. Aravindhan Alagarsamy

Dr. Aravindhan Alagarsamy focused on “Project-Based Learning: A Paradigm Shift” and highlighted innovative pedagogical approaches for effective teaching–learning practices.

In his session, he emphasized the need to shift from traditional lecture-based teaching to application-oriented and problem-driven learning approaches that enhance student engagement and promote deeper understanding. He introduced the Concept of Rearrangement (Top-Down Approach), explaining how teaching can begin with a real-world application and gradually introduce theoretical concepts as they become relevant in the design or problem-solving process. He illustrated this approach using the example of ASIC and FPGA design flow, where students first understand the application, followed by system architecture, design, implementation, and optimization.

Dr. Aravindhan also discussed the CO–BTL mapping and learning outcomes associated with the rearranged teaching approach, highlighting the importance of aligning course outcomes with appropriate levels of Bloom’s Taxonomy to ensure effective teaching and assessment.

The session further covered the Flipped Learning Model, which provides a flexible learning environment by allowing students to access instructional materials before class. Classroom time can then be effectively used for discussions, collaborative learning, and higher-order thinking activities. He also emphasized the importance of e-content preparation, including recording lectures, developing digital resources, and creating virtual labs to support flipped classrooms and improve accessibility for learners.

Report on Session Delivered by Dr. V. S. Aswin Kumar

Dr. V. S. Aswin Kumar has delivered a session on the theme "Transforming Pedagogy through Project-Based Learning."

In his session, he explained that Project-Based Learning (PBL) is a student-centered instructional approach where students acquire deeper knowledge by actively exploring real-world challenges and solving practical problems. He highlighted that PBL shifts learning from surface-level understanding to deeper learning, encouraging students to analyze, synthesize, and create solutions rather than simply memorizing theoretical concepts.

Dr. Aswin Kumar discussed various levels of PBL implementation in engineering education, including Activity-Based Learning (ABL), Case Study-Based Learning (CBL), Mini-Project Based Learning (MPBL), and Capstone Project-Based Learning (CPBL). Activity-Based Learning focuses on short tasks that help students understand specific concepts through hands-on practice. Case Study-Based Learning involves analyzing real-world scenarios and proposing suitable solutions. Mini-Projects require students to apply course-related skills to develop working prototypes or simulations, while Capstone Projects represent the highest level of PBL, where students integrate knowledge from multiple disciplines to solve complex real-world problems.

To illustrate the practical implementation of PBL, he presented examples from courses such as Digital Design and Computer Architecture, demonstrating how project-based tasks can help students apply theoretical concepts in designing and analyzing digital systems. Through such examples, he explained how faculty can structure projects, define clear problem statements, and guide students toward developing functional solutions.

He also explained the key steps involved in implementing PBL effectively, such as identifying the course category, selecting appropriate activities or projects, defining a clear driving question, forming student teams, and setting milestones for project progress. He emphasized the importance of continuous mentoring and formative assessment, where faculty guide students through inquiry, troubleshooting, and collaborative problem-solving.

Report on Session Delivered by Dr. M. Kavitha

Dr. M. Kavitha delivered a session focusing on the implementation of PBL in technical courses and planning courses under the trimester model.

During the session, Dr. Kavitha explained how a Deep Learning course can be effectively designed and delivered using the Project-Based Learning approach. She demonstrated how theoretical concepts in Deep Learning can be integrated with practical applications through carefully designed projects, enabling students to gain hands-on experience while understanding the underlying principles.

She further elaborated on how course delivery can be structured in a trimester-based academic system, where the course content is divided into well-planned phases. Each phase focuses on specific learning objectives, gradually guiding students from foundational concepts to advanced applications through project-based tasks. This approach helps ensure continuous learning, regular progress monitoring, and meaningful engagement throughout the trimester.

Dr. Kavitha also discussed strategies for planning a PBL-oriented course, including identifying suitable project themes, defining learning outcomes, scheduling milestones, and integrating continuous assessment methods. She emphasized the importance of aligning projects with course objectives so that students can apply theoretical knowledge to solve practical problems.

The session concluded by highlighting how PBL transforms the role of students from passive learners to active investigators, thereby improving engagement, creativity, teamwork, and problem-solving skills. Overall, the session provided faculty members with practical insights into adopting Project-Based Learning strategies to enhance experiential and outcome-based education.

5. Outcomes of the Programme

- Faculty gained a clear understanding of the principles and framework of Project-Based Learning (PBL).
- Enhanced ability to design and deliver PBL-based courses aligned with outcome-based education.
- Better understanding of different PBL models such as activity-based, case-based, mini-projects, and capstone projects.
- Strengthened knowledge of course planning under the trimester system with structured milestones and assessments.
- Enhanced capability to act as facilitators and mentors rather than traditional instructors.

- Improved focus on student engagement, critical thinking, collaboration, and problem-solving skills.

8. Conclusion:

The Faculty Development Programme on Project-Based Learning (PBL) was successfully conducted, providing valuable insights into modern teaching methodologies and effective course design. The sessions enabled faculty members to understand the significance of student-centered, application-oriented learning and the need to integrate real-world problem-solving into the curriculum.

The FDP also highlighted key institutional initiatives such as the implementation of the trimester system and the structured adoption of PBL across courses. Faculty members gained clarity on planning, execution, and assessment of PBL-based courses, along with their role as facilitators of active learning.

Overall, the programme has laid a strong foundation for enhancing teaching–learning practices, promoting deeper student engagement, and moving towards a more innovative and outcome-driven academic environment.
