Resource Person:

- Ms. Khushboo Kumar, Senior Customer Success Manager, Coursera.

2. Introduction

The Academic Staff College, KLEF, Vaddeswaram Campus, with the support of the Skill Development Division and the Academics Division, KLEF, and in collaboration with Coursera, organized a two-day Hands-on Workshop on "AI-Powered Teaching with Coursera: From Course Creation to Secure Assessment" on 19th and 20th June 2026. The workshop was planned for the faculty members of KLEF with the objective of equipping them with practical knowledge and hands-on experience in using Coursera's AI-powered teaching and assessment tools to enrich course delivery, improve learner engagement, and strengthen secure digital evaluation practices.

The workshop was conducted by Ms. Khushboo Kumar, Senior Customer Success Manager , Coursera, who served as the resource person for all the sessions. Through a structured and practice-oriented approach, she introduced participants to Coursera's evolving AI-enabled ecosystem for higher education and demonstrated how faculty members can use the platform to create courses, design interactive learning experiences, and implement secure, technology-supported assessment practices. Since the programme was intended for a large number of faculty members across disciplines, it was conducted in four slots over two days to ensure effective participation and hands-on engagement by all attendees.

3. Objectives of the Workshop

The workshop was organized with the following objectives:

- To familiarize faculty members with AI-powered teaching tools available on the Coursera platform
- To provide practical training in course creation and content design using Coursera Course Builder
- To enable faculty members to create interactive and engaging learning experiences using AI-supported features such as role plays and AI-enabled assessment.
- To encourage faculty members to adopt technology-driven teaching practices aligned with contemporary higher education needs

The workshop began with introductory words by Dr. Radhika Rani Chitala, Principal, Academic Staff College, on the changing landscape of higher education and the growing importance of Artificial Intelligence in teaching, learning, and assessment. Ms. Khushboo Kumar explained how AI is increasingly transforming the way courses are designed, delivered, and evaluated, and how digital learning platforms like Coursera are creating new possibilities for faculty members to enhance student learning experiences. She emphasized that AI-powered teaching tools are not merely technological add-ons, but practical enablers that can support faculty in developing personalized, interactive, and outcome-oriented learning environments.

One of the major highlights of the workshop was the hands-on demonstration of Coursera's Course Builder. The resource person guided participants through the process of designing and structuring course content using the platform. Faculty members were introduced to the workflow of course creation, including defining learning objectives, organizing course modules, sequencing instructional content, and aligning the content with student learning outcomes. Participants were able to explore the interface directly and understand how course content can be customized according to subject requirements.

Another important component of the workshop was the use of AI-supported tools for content generation and instructional design. The participants were shown how AI can assist educators in refining course materials, generating activity ideas, improving clarity in instructional content, and building learning resources that are more engaging and student-centered. The session highlighted the value of AI in reducing the time required for course preparation while also improving the quality and relevance of instructional materials. Faculty members were encouraged to think of AI not as a replacement for teaching expertise, but as a collaborative tool that can support them in designing richer and more effective learning experiences.

A particularly engaging segment of the workshop focused on Role Plays and Dialogue-based learning features available through Coursera. Ms. Kushboo Kumar demonstrated how faculty members can create interactive learning activities in which students can participate in simulated scenarios, dialogues, and decision-making exercises. She explained how such tools can be especially useful in helping students develop communication skills, critical thinking, analytical reasoning, and practical problem-solving abilities. The faculty participants explored how these features can be adapted to different disciplines and used to make learning more experiential, reflective, and application-oriented.

The workshop also gave significant attention to AI-enabled assessment and secure evaluation mechanisms. Faculty members were introduced to AI-Graded Assessments and Proctored Custom Assessments, which are designed to support efficient, scalable, and reliable evaluation of student performance. The resource person explained how AI-assisted grading can help streamline the assessment process while maintaining consistency and objectivity. She also discussed the importance of secure assessment in digital learning environments and demonstrated how proctoring tools can help maintain academic integrity during online examinations and assignment submissions. Participants gained practical exposure to configuring assessments, setting evaluation parameters, and understanding how AI can be used to monitor and support secure assessment practices.

The workshop was designed as a practical, hands-on programme rather than a purely lecture-based session, and this made the experience highly engaging for the participants. Faculty members worked directly on the Coursera platform during the sessions and were encouraged to experiment with different tools and features under the guidance of the resource person. They explored the process of creating sample courses, organizing content modules, building assessments, and understanding the functionality of interactive learning features. This practical exposure enabled participants to gain confidence in using the platform and to visualize how these tools could be integrated into their own teaching practice.

Outcomes of the Workshop

- Enhanced faculty competency in using AI-powered tools for course creation, content development, and digital teaching.
- Strengthened understanding of interactive learning methodologies and personalized student engagement through Coursera's AI-enabled features.
- Developed practical skills in designing secure, AI-assisted assessments while ensuring academic integrity.
- Encouraged the adoption of innovative, technology-driven pedagogical practices to enhance teaching effectiveness and improve learning outcomes.
